Socrates went round the town on foot and talked to people. The Athenians began to look for his familiar figure in the streets and to say to their friends, "Yes, that's Socrates, come along and talk to him." After sometime Socrates became famous as a teacher. He wandered along the roads and stood in the market places, talking to anyone who cared to greet him. His listeners were often confused after they had argued with him or answered his questions. Socrates told his countrymen that everyone must learn to think for himself, so that by using his reason he would have the power to see what was right, just true and beautiful and so shape his own conduct. He wanted Athens to be a perfect state. He told everyone – both his pupils and his other followers – that, this could only happen if every citizen educated his own mind to see what was right and noble.

Punctuality is the soul of business. If a man opens his shop later than the appointed time, his customers will go away to other shops to make purchases. So also, when a trader comes to a railway station, only a few minutes before the departure of a train, in which his merchandise is to be booked, he causes much inconvenience not only to himself but also to other persons with whom he has to deal. Similarly, if a school boy comes to school late, he misses his lessons for the time being and if he goes on indulging in the habit, he becomes unsuccessful in the examination at the end of the year. It is, therefore, justly said that most of the failures in the examinations of the present day are due to the want of habit of punctuality in our boys.

(i) Whom does a businessman who is not punctual, cause inconvenience to? 3

(ii) What is the reason of most of the failures? 3
