

Necessity is the Mother of Invention

---

There is ample truth in this saying. It was the necessity of procuring food for his belly by kill up wild animals at a distance that forced the primitive man invent weapons like the spear, the boomerang and the blow and the arrows. Once again, it must have been the necessity protecting his naked body from the scorching heat and terrible cold and other in clementines of weather which urged the ancient man to clothe his body with leaves and palm leaves and then with the skin and fur of animals and subsequently with wool and cotton. Language, in the early stages, must have been the outcome of necessity of men to communicate with one another. Coming to the modern times, it was the necessity of curing the death-dealing cancer and malignant tumors that lead to the discovery of the radium treatment which is very useful in the initial stages of the maladies. When the surgeons found it very difficult to know the exact nature of a stone in the kidney or say a tumor in the brain, X-ray was invented.

So, it is necessity that compiles a man to take initiative and strive hand, to discover something new, if nature were to put everything at his disposal, just like a lories-eater he will slumber and slumber, doing nothing, achieving nothing.