

The value of Discipline

Discipline is the be all and end all of life. Life without discipline is no life. Just an un-primed garden is no garden but only a elide forest, life without discipline is mere existence which even inanimate object t and animals and bacteria have.

So to make human life worthwhile, discipline has to be observed. Nature follows all laws of discipline. It is thus that the sun rises and sets and the flowers bloom and wither.

Discipline must be learnt early in life. It is in the fitness of things that the physical drills and sports have been made compulsory in some institutions. These must bloke made compulsory in all schools and colleges.

The first lessons of disciplines are learnt at home when the child is taught to obey his parents, elders and teachers. When the children or young people play in the field or even in the street, they follow certain rules of team spirit.

Discipline is not denial of liberty. In fact, discipline and liberty go hand in hand. If we want liberty for ourselves, we have to grant liberty to others also as others may also demand it in equal measure. That can lead to chaos. So, we have to make a compromise and that is discipline. In other words, we have voluntarily to curtail a part of livery that we want and others have likewise to do so for our sake. Thus, discipline ensures smooth flow of life.
