

A Foolish Crow

Once there was a crow. He was hungry and looking something to eat. After a long search he was able to get a piece of bread. It held the piece in its beak. He flew to a tree nearby. The crow was about to eat it when a fox appeared.

The fox was very hungry. It saw the crow holding the piece of bread in its beak. It wanted to get the bread. The fox was very cunning. It thought out a scheme to be fool the crow. It told the crow that it sang very well. It flattered the crow and asked it to sing a song.

The foolish crow was tricked. It felt happy and started singing. As it opened its beak to sing, the piece of bread fell down. The fox picked up the piece and ran away.

Moral: those who are flattered come to grief. Or beware of flatters.
