Question 1. (Do not spend more than 30 minutes on this question.) Write a composition (300-350 words) on any one of the following:

1.1. Write a composition (300-350 words) on the following:

Write an original short story entitled 'A Strange Visitor'.

Solution

A Strange Visitor

She arrived, she observed, and she overcame. She was mysterious, gorgeous, and vibrantly alive. She was there, smiling brilliantly, as I opened the front door one morning. As she spoke English, my heart missed a beat. "Mohan Sharma?" she inquired with a beautiful sparkle in her voice. I nodded, entirely stunned. I lost faith in my voice. She grinned eeristically as though she knew my mental state.

"I'm Sophie," she said. "I am here to spend a day evaluating your way of life."

Indeed! And under the name of God, who dispatched you to meddle in my personal life?" I wanted to retort, but words choked me. She elegantly headed to the kitchen and said, "I'll assume the host since you lost your etiquette. How about my making us some coffee?" I managed a nod with nervousness. And in not too long I was clutching a steaming mug of coffee. She filled in the void with "grandparents". The woman arching one eyebrow questioned, "How do I know?" She said with tremendous certainty, "Well, I'm a tech marvel and you'll realise it very soon". She then looked about the room, the artwork and relics, the gadgets, and what not.

She was invading my space, and although I could not be nasty since my head was still confused about what was occurring, I could not be nasty. Many Alexas appeared to be following a hodgepodge of instructions, and a few more unidentified machines ran with quiet efficiency. Perfectly roasted mutton was presented with pizzas that rolled tantalistically on the table. All the equipment in the room responded to her just with a gesture. She seemed to have an invisible relationship with the technology all around us. A tech master is fantastic!

Then, as quickly as she had materialised, Sophie moved towards the door, her motions imbued with another world grace. She stopped at the doorway and looked across her shoulder, which appeared to cut right through the very fabric of reality. "Remember, Mohan," she added, her voice booming with a depth that felt both old and futuristic, "the world is far more wonderful than you have let yourself see." She left me wondering who she was then disappeared into the evening. Was she a figuration of my thoughts, a celestial visitor, an artificial intelligence masquerading as a human? Sophie lingered, turning a daily event into an intriguing mystery.

1.2. Write a composition (300-350 words) the following:

Narrate an incident from your experience in which your parents had entrusted you with a difficult task. Give details of the task, how you carried it out and your feelings at the end.

Solution

"Do it yourself," came the strong voice of my father. My mother gave a small smile. I was stuck. Should I be cleaning my room alone? My panic seized me.

There was tension, but a flash of excitement danced over. We had moved into a bigger house, and shockingly, I found a room all to myself! a comfortable, well-ventilated room including a built-in wardrobe! As I considered the options, where to visit, and how I may arrange my room, my mind flew. First, though, the enormous effort of sorting the containers loomed. I opened every package hour by hour, carefully arranging my room.

I arranged a small dressing table across from my study table, placed my study table beside a brilliantly lit window, and set aside a wall shelf for my beloved Harry Potter collection. My luggage and clothes fit rather nicely in there. Time came for hanging the drapes and the pure white mosquito net; all small and nicely packed. Rising from the ceiling, it created a lavish fairy tale scenario that turned the area into one from a fairy tale, accentuated by the gentle illumination of string lights.

The sofa bed had fluffy, frilly cushions and a lovely bed cover from my mom matched the décor exactly. Satisfied, I looked over my work but thought something was missing. Perhaps one or two indoor plants. I chose to ignore my parents whispering as I down the stairs. When I got back, I found a wonderful metamorphosis.

Fairy lights threw a celestial radiance across the room like little stars. And on my study table stood my mom clutching a lovely bunch of fresh flowers ideal for my vase. Overwhelmed with thanks, I hugged both of them for allowing me to arrange my room to suit my taste and for their subdued methods of appreciating my effort.

1.3. Write a composition (300-350 words) the following:

Describe how you spend your time on a holiday afternoon. Why do you think it is necessary to have these times of quietness and solitude?

Solution

What a break from it! After a busy week of studies and rushing about, a quiet holiday day by yourself is a welcome diversion. Nestled in my cosy woollen blanket, clutching a thrilling book and a cup of soothing ginger tea on the bedside table, I am surrounded by a calm bubble of satisfaction. I enjoy the suspense as the story approaches its climax so that my imagination may investigate several likely results. Rare is a perfect day like today.

Not tests, not a project to turn in, not housework to complete. Just free leisure. This independence stimulates the imagination and helps daydreams fly free and artistic ideas come to pass. There are advantages to afternoon siestas. First, a period of "quiet brings a sense of fulfilment.". Creativity leaps from millions of ideas, illuminating the subtleties of the mind.

Positive flows are backed by inner calm and contentment. Many poets and dramatists have found inspiration in such solitude when the silence of the afternoon gives their work life. It's incredible how a calm holiday could inspire us to create scripts, stories, and poems, all of which might otherwise lie dormant.

One cannot really overestimate the need for silence and solitude. These times are not just breaks from the daily grind but also necessary for spiritual development, inspiration, and a closer knowledge of oneself. They break from the craziness of life.

1.4. Write a composition (300-350 words) the following:

Express your views either for or against the statement 'Junk food should be banned'.

Solution

For the statement

I really agree with the case to outlaw junk food. The simple word "junk" makes one think of all unwelcome, dangerous objects gathering around our homes. If we seek both physical and mental health, foods that block our arteries, promote fat cells to multiply, and weaken our muscles have no place in our diets. Often struggling with self-control in the face of tantalising, scented fried dishes sizzling in toxic fats, we are creatures of taste and habit.

Often, the sight and smell of fried food seething and sizzling in fatty acids are irresistible. A tongue used to the flavour of melting conserved cheese can overwhelm the most informed dietary information, therefore generating an irresistible need to indulge. It cannot be moved from giving in to the urge by any amount of reason or hard-hitting facts. Under such circumstances, only a complete prohibition will be able to sufficiently reduce these impulses.

With their diversity of sauces and spices meant to appeal to the palate, frequently at the expense of health, the enormous lines at fast-food outlets confirm the explosive industry of convenience meals. Artificial colours and taste enhancers impair our health; children, especially are exposed to these risks. Before our future generations have an opportunity to flourish, as a society we have to shield them from such dangers.

Small fast-food establishments run in the nooks and edges of cities where no quality or hygiene is guaranteed, while food control agencies oversee hotels and restaurants. Obesity and heart-related problems have become the bane of modern civilization; the sooner these are eliminated, the better for the people; a complete ban on junk food is the only way to prevent a future health catastrophe.

Against the statement

Though it might seem like a simple fix, banning junk food is more like following shadows. Such dishes are unquestionably appealing and well established in many people's taste in cuisine.

Junk food, characterised by its lack of nutrients and high-calorie content, might not contribute to a healthy diet, but neither do many traditional foods we consume daily. Numerous packaged foods on our kitchen shelves, laden with unhealthy ingredients, must also be banned under such criteria.

Furthermore, these "problematic" foods are quick meals that satisfy appetites at a reasonable cost, therefore meeting the needs of both students and professionals. In moderation, these supposedly "junk" foods offer a welcome diversion from the monotony of home-cooked cuisine. This is the reason they are termed optional or "discretionary" meals.

One wonders how something like a burger, loaded with meat and fresh greens, fits into the trash category. Are they worse than white rice or dishes cooked in refined oils, which have been stripped of their essential nutrients and are the mainstay of many diets? Many dietitians contend that the true offenders, processed rice and bread, should be taken off our diets. Does that, however, support a government-mandated ban on widely consumed basic foods? There are other ways to handle the problem than enforcing prohibitions than bans. Most vital is awareness. Much of the harm caused by "junk" food can be greatly reduced if the public is informed by promotional activities, if courses in healthy eating are included in schoolbooks, and if celebrities avoid endorsing unhealthful products. An excellent example of encouraging healthier choices, India's effort to emphasise millets and red rice during the G20 Meet motivates people to change their diets. Without resorting to extreme measures, encouraging the manufacture of reasonably priced organic foods, regulatory warnings on products heavy in empty calories and possible health hazards, and lobbying against bad eating habits can help to make society more health-conscious.

1.5. Write a composition (300-350 words) on the following:

Study the picture given below. Write a story or a description or an account of what it suggests to you. Your composition may be about the subject of the picture, or you may take suggestions from it; however, there must be a clear connection between the picture and your composition.

Solution

Children come to enjoy their preferred past time as the afternoon sun paints golden tones over the area. Among their games is a creative spin on carom performed on a specially designed board that combines imagination with part invention. Playing a special form of carom on a board, they created is one of their favourite pastimes. Showcasing their inventiveness, this unique board combines an essential kiln with a smooth surface with corner holes.

The children's exuberance on their faces is evidence of their great enjoyment of the game. Though they lack the flashy toys and devices city children have, the village children discover their means of entertainment. They always find methods to keep themselves occupied, whether dangling from branches, climbing trees, or playing cricket on uneven areas with homemade wickets and handcrafted wooden bats and string balls.

Barefoot and free-spirited, they join together to play in their straightforward, carefree manner, demonstrating that enjoyment does not depend on costly things. Their modest manner of life or lack of conveniences do not hamper their dreams. A few of them dream grandi. Among them is Raja, a young lad with great aspirations. Photographed, his focused gaze and hopeful smile point to him as destined for great things.

Raja, the son of industrious parents, manages his education by doing housework. But he likes playing at night, full of laughter and handcrafted toys. He uses his leisure time in the evenings to play with friends and create mud pots and other nick-knobs he may use as toys. The board game he created and developed with friends' assistance is perfect. Who knows? Perhaps a future architect or scientist is dormant and waiting to soar the planet with his achievements!

Question 2. (Do not spend more than 20 minutes on this question.) Select any one of the following:

2.1. Your friend was absent from school on a day when an unfortunate incident took place for which you were blamed. Write a letter to your friend giving details about the incident, your role in it and how the matter was finally resolved.

Dear Ashish,

After the procedure, I expect you are healing nicely. I am equally thrilled to meet you and know you are keen to start your education. I'm writing to let you know of a regrettable occurrence that occurred today during the meeting.

Examining our baggage was done while tests were still under way. As luck would have it, my backpack turned up a roll of minutely written notes that were confiscated. I truly had no idea how that got in there. The perfect asl could explain; I could just stand there and blink.

Some pupils were grinning at my discomfiture. You would have been by my side like a rock, therefore I missed you badly. Still, our friend kunal had the foresight to verify the closed circuit. Camera, and I discovered a lad from another class sliding something into my bag.

That was sufficient to quell my own mistrust. Though I'm glad I have been cleared of a major allegation, the situation has helped me identify my actual friends. I just hope you start showing up for class right away. I miss you sorely. I look forward to seeing you shortly.

Yours lovingly,
Rajesh

2.2. You wish to stage a play to create awareness about the importance of saving electricity. The Manager
Suvidha Supermarket,
M. K. Road,
Jaipur - 302009.

Dear Sir,

Writing on behalf of our school's Drama Club, I am looking for your approval for an original project. Centred on the crucial theme of saving power, a topic of tremendous relevance to every part of our community, we intend to present a play. We want a wide audience, hence we are looking for a site that naturally draws a lot of visitors. We ask permission to stage our performance across the large area in front of the supermarket since it seems like the best spot to draw attention.

Since the message of our play speaks to both shopkeepers and the general public equally, I hope you will help us by providing us permission to use the venue for our performance.

We appreciate your consideration of our request and look forward to the possibility of collaborating with you on this community-oriented project.

Thanking you,

Yours faithfully,

Arjun Ahuja

Subject: Inviting Your Dance Teacher to Judge Inter School Dance Competition at Royal School

Dear Madam,

With this email, hopefully, I will find you well. On behalf of Royal School, where we are feverly getting ready for our forthcoming inter-school Dance Competition, I am writing to you. From 9 a.m. to 12 p.m., this event is set for the Surabhi Auditorium on our school grounds on March 22, 2024. We are dedicated to making the competition fair and unforgettable for every involved institution. We are contacting eminent dance teachers to create our panel of judges in order to guarantee the success of this event. It would be a pleasure for us to have your dance teacher judge the competition, given the standing of your school's dance programmes and her experiences. If you could arrange for the dancing teacher from your institution to evaluate the competitors, we would be much obliged. Please give our invitation some thought. We look forward to having your dance teacher attend our event.

Warm Regards,

Yours faithfully,

Amrita Rao

Secretary, Arts Club

Royal School

Question 4. Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow:

Ashamanja Babu lived in a small flat in Bhowanipore. A clerk in the registry department of Lajpat Rai Post Office, Ashamanja Babu was fortunate as he could walk to his office in seven minutes flat without having to fight his way into the buses and trains of Calcutta. He lived a rather carefree life as he was not the kind of person to sit and brood about what might have been had fate been kinder to him. On the whole, he was quite content with his lot. Two Hindi films and fish twice a week-these were enough to keep him happy. The only thing that 10 perturbed him at times was his lack of companionship. A bachelor with few friends and relatives, he often wished he had a dog to keep him company. It need not be a huge Alsatian like the one owned by the Talukdars, who lived two houses down the lane; it could be any ordinary little dog which would follow him around morning and evening, wag its tail when he came home from work and obey his orders faithfully. Ashamanja Babu's secret desires were that he would speak to his dog in English.

'Stand up', 'Sit down', 'Shake hands' - how nice it 20 would be if his dog obeyed such commands! That would make him really happy.

On a cloudy day marked by a steady drizzle, Ashamanja Babu went to the market in Hashimara to buy some oranges. At one end of the market, beside a stunted kul tree, sat a man. As their eyes met, the man smiled. Was he a beggar? His clothes made him look like one. Ashamanja Babu noticed at least five sewn-on patches on his trousers and jacket. But the man didn't have a begging bowl. Instead, by his side was a shoe-box with a 30 little pup sticking its head out of it.

'Good morning!' said the man in English. Ashamanja Babu was obliged to return the greeting.

'Buy dog? Dog buy? Very good dog.' The man had taken the pup out of the box and had put it down on the ground. 'Very cheap. Very good. Happy dog.'

The pup shook the raindrops off its coat, looked at Ashamanja Babu and wagged its minuscule two-inch tail. Ashamanja Babu moved closer to the pup, crouched ' on the ground and stretched out his hand. The pup gave 40 his ring finger a lick with its pink tongue. Nice, friendly dog.

'How much? What price?'

'Ten rupees.'

A little haggling and the price came down to seven rupees. Ashamanja Babu paid the money, put the pup back in the shoe-box, closed the lid to save it from the drizzle, and turned homewards, forgetting all about the oranges.
