Nature of Colonialism

Solution: 1. Colonialism is the act of a developed nation occupying the land of a less developed, distant nation and establishing their rule on the occupied country.

Europeans travelled all over the world with various intentions such as the urge for adventures, to earn name, to discover unknown lands, to search for gold mines etc.

2. The Europeans established colonies wherever they went and in doing so there was a competition to gain economic, social and political supremacy among the nations.

Extreme nationalism, feeling of racial superiority, industrialisation, aggressive approach etc., are the factors that led to the growth of colonialism.

3. Thus, Europeans went to America, Australia and New Zealand. The Europeans also colonised Asia. However, the climate of Asia did not favour them. Favourable or unfavourable, Europeans disposed of the indigenous people in their own lands.

4. The Europeans saw these colonies as potential marketplaces to sell their surplus goods which were accumulated as a result of mass production. The Europeans also needed additional sources that would provide ample raw material.

5. In the latter half of the 19th century, England built a flourishing trade as a result of industrial revolution.

Solution: The colonies got into several battles with the British army even after gaining independence. The colonies finally at Saratoga got a decisive victory over the British army. This victory proved to be a turning point for the colonies as the French agreed to support them in their conflict against the British. Eventually, Spain also joined the conflicts in their struggle for independence. On 7th October 1780, George Washington defeated the British army. On 19th October, The British General Lord Cornwallis surrendered and America became independent. The American revolt for independence is also known as the 'American Revolution'. America proved to the world that the subjects have a right to fight their rulers who deny them their natural rights.

Explain the following statement with reason.

The Industrial revolution gave momentum to colonialism.

Solution: Colonialism was a result of the industrial revolution. Production increased enormously because of the new machines. However, the rate of local consumption was much less compared to the surplus rate of production. Hence, the immediate need of the Europeans was to find new markets for selling their products. It was also necessary that these markets be dependable and easy to dominate.

Exercise Q.5 | Q 2 | Page 18

Explain the following statement with reason.

European nations established colonies in America.

Solution: The stronger European nations dominated the weaker countries by establishing colonies there and pushed them to subjection. The lands of the original inhabitants in America were seized by the Europeans and were also massacred. The original inhabitants were forced into slavery, The Europeans discovered gold mines and the Spanish colonists brought African slaves to work in sugarcane and tobacco fields. Farming and mining earned them enormous wealth. Essential raw materials were exported to Spain and the finished goods used to be imported for sale in the local markets for the colonies. The trade of gold and silver also earned huge profits for the king. Witnessing Spain's prosperity England, Holland and France also began to establish colonies in America.
