A Friend in Need Is a Friend Indeed

In the dictionary, a friend is defined as a person whom one knows well and is fond of. A friend is someone who cherishes the special moments and memories of life with another person. A friend is a trustworthy companion. Friendship is a relationship that takes time to build. There are many steps and stages to achieving a true friendship. However, one can think building a friendship is like planting a garden. Planting a garden needs devotion and leisure. It takes patience to grow a garden. Frustrations and hardships are also involved in the process. Firstly, the seed is planted. The seed builds the foundation of a strong and stable plant. It has to be taken care of and watered daily. Then the shoots start sprouting, the plant is finally flourishing. One can see day by day the garden maturing. Then one day the garden starts to wilt, it starts dying. One has to tend to it and have the patience and determination to bring it back to life. It frustrates one to see the insects and predators preying on the beautiful garden that once existed. But hard work and devotion regain the garden's beauty and gives it life again. Soon the shoots blossom a bloom into beautiful flowers. The charm and divine beauty of the garden is a wonderful enlightening sight. Building a friendship has similar characteristics. One meets a person and plants the seed of friendship. The friendship builds and continues to grow stronger. It requires devotion of time and patience to achieve peak communication between the two companions. The struggle to keep a solid friendship includes many obstacles and hardships. But compromising, devotion, and the willingness to endure are bound to pay off in the end. Friendship has its good and bad times. There comes a time when the relationship is just not working. It is preoccupied with disagreements and quarrels. It is on the verge of destruction. One must have the patience to deal with such frustrations. The willingness and determination to get the relationship working again come from within. It is great to have a strong and stable relationship that allows the two companions to share the joys and memories of life together. Friends play an important role in a person's life. They encourage when one is sad, they entertain when one is lonesome, and they listen when one has problems. Friends that grew up with would share the happiness and sadness one might have. However, friends that grew up with might not always be the best friends because they could be faking it or been concealing some secrets. So, it is very important for one to recognize all the friends he or she has because good friends are hard to find. Good friends should not be measured only on the basis of the time spent together. With good friends, one is able to have a more meaningful life. As you take that long journey through life you will never be alone. A friend will always be there if you need her. A friend never turns her back on you when you need her. The one true friend you meet along the way will never give up on your friendship no matter what.

As you go through life many different people will come and go, only a few will grasp on a piece of your heart forever. To some extent, friends are the people that make you the person you are. A good friend is hard to find so once he/she grasps on do not ever let him/her go.

A friend in need is a friend indeed

Outline: We should have few friends and they must be true friends – people have many friends in prosperity—but they cannot be called friends unless they are tested – it is in a moment of need that we know our true friends – false friends do not stand by us in adversity – this proves the truth of the proverb.

There are people who like to have many friends. But this should not be so. We should have only a few friends, but they must be our true friends. A friend is one who can share your joys and sorrows.

Rich people may have many friends in their prosperity. All like to enjoy themselves at the expense of those who are rich. Most of them are only fair-weather friends. If the rich man loses his money, all his friends will leave him. This shows that they are not true friends. They fail the test of friendship.

It is adversity that tests friendship. If a man is in trouble, or in need and his friend stands by him, that is a true friend. A good friend will never desert a man in his hour of danger. One is reminded of an old story about two men and a bear. Two men who were supposed to be friends were crossing a forest. Suddenly they saw a bear coming towards them. One man immediately climbed a tree, leaving the other to face the bear alone. The other man could not climb trees. So he threw himself flat on the ground and pretended to be dead. The bear came up to him and smelt him all over. Thinking he was dead, the bear walked away. The man who was up in the tree came down. He asked his friend what the bear had whispered in his ear. The other man, being clever, said "The bear told me not to trust any man who runs away from me when I am in danger. This story proves that a friend in need is a friend indeed."

A friend in need is a friend indeed

As social beings, we depend on one another for our happiness and well-being. The companionship we share with others helps both them and us make life really worth living. But life may not always be peaceful and happy. Occasionally we face troubles of different kinds when we need the company of our friends and relatives more than in normal times. In such periods of crises, we notice that except a few, most of those that appeared friendly are unwilling to help us out of our troubles. We realize then that their friendship was unreal, and was, perhaps, with selfish motives. Such experiences also teach us to consider only those that remain our friends in times of both crisis and happiness, like real friends.
