

What present or presents you would like to give on the marriage

Giving of present is as much joyful or even more joyful than receiving it. I wish that I would have been as rich as Harun-Al-Rashid who was very fond of making presents to known as well as unknown persons. Presents may be divided into two categories, birthday presents and UN birthday presents are given informally on any occasion. So they are a source of greater joy as they bring unexpected pleasure. But here we are concerned only with birthday presents.

My present on the occasion of my younger sister's marriage will be a present to be an expression of the unlimited love that I bear in my heart to her. So I shall not very much think over the usefulness of the present, I shall not very much think over the usefulness of the present. I shall only find out which thing will give her the greatest joy. I shall only find out which thing will give her the greatest joy. I shall not therefore, give her a book on home science, a watch or a camera. She is very fond of playing upon the harmonium and is a good singer herself. You might laugh at my choice, but I have made up my mind and I must present to her a fine beautiful harmonium.

While making a choice of a present to give my friend on the occasion of his marriage, I shall thoughtfully decide what can be useful to him, I think some really good book make the present that should be given to a friend. I will have four books to present to him. The first will be Pati Path Pradarshak. I wish that he may read it and prove a worthy husband to his wife. The second will be patipath pradarshak which he may present in his turn this wife to make her know the duties and responsibilities of a good wife. The third will be Gorky's other of which he is very fond and the fourth will be the Indian classic known as the Mahabharata so that my friend may even exercise in his life the message of Lord Krishna, Do your duty without expecting any fruits." I shall not forget to present an alarm watch to my friend because he is by habit a late riser and he must remedy this bad habit.

In case of a relative I shall not like to cut a joke as I may do in case of a friend by presenting him with an alarm watch. I shall see what taste my relative has, because presents are given not to improve the taste of the receiver but to satisfy it. In my opinion, pictures scents or neck ties are not good presents, because tastes differ from man to man about them.

If my relative is a girl, I must give her among other presents a fine purse and a table lamp. If my relative is a boy, I would like to present him with a camera or a fine suit. In addition, I would also like to give him a beautiful hand bag or me. If it could be possible for me I would also give him a fine have a very wide selection of presents and I feel that I must visit some modern shopping centers to make choice of some other suitable presents.
