Sir,

Kindly publish the following few lines in the columns of your esteemed Daily and oblige.

India is passing through a bad phase. A country of saints and sages is today becoming known for its corrupt leaders. A large number of public men are involved in scams and kick-backs. Corruption appears to have become the order of the day. There is hardly any political leader who can be cited as an ideal or a model for the younger generation. Moral values are also at the lowest ebb. Public men in high places pay scant regard to decency, decorum or discipline in public life. The politics of defections and crime has brought morals to the lowest ebb. Everything appears to be fair in the game of politics. People are today prepared to sacrifice any principles for attaining power or pelf. All this must end. Our country and its leaders have always been known for their spirit of honesty, truth, non-violence, charity and sacrifice. We must learn to uphold those values in social life.

With thanks

Yours faithfully,

X Y Z.
