I pulled myself up at last and somehow managed to walk into Bardfield. I went straight to the police station, of course. It's the first building you reach if you come that way. And there I reported that someone had stolen my car, a new umbrella, a gold watch and all my money. Of course, as soon as I got there. I remembered who the man was. His picture was on the wall outside. I'd seen it every day for a week. That's why his face reminded me of Bardfield. Under the picture were some words. Wanted for Robbery with Violence and Attempted Murder. John, Oh dear, I've forgotten the name again. I just can't keep names in my head. But that's the man. I tell you - I never forget a face!

W. 2 Read the passage and write its summary. Also suggest a suitable title to it:

I have been to Garhwal only once for a few days. It is not easily reachable as even roads are lacking in that area, except bridle paths for pilgrims. I only visited some of the towns in the lower areas. I had glimpse, however, of the whole vast area and beyond from the air, for we took a plane from Hardwar and flew right over Badrinath till we seemed almost to collide against the huge snow wall of the mountain barrier which separates India from Tibet. The flight lasted a few hours only- there and back - I carried away vivid impressions which endure. Two impressions especially: the snowy range, with its mighty peaks, majestic and fiercely beautiful and the silver thread of the Alaknanda river, winding its way deep down through the mountains. The Alaknanda river, as perhaps you know, is one of the principal source rivers of the Ganga. (150 words)
