When we were children
My brother and I
And always playing on the sands
Drawing birds and animals
Our great-grandmother said one day,
You see this house of ours
Now three hundred years old,
It's falling to little bits
Before our very eyes
The walls are cracked and torn
And moistened by the rains,
The tiles have fallen here and there
The windows whine and groan
And every night
The rats come out of the holes
And scamper past our doors.
The snake-shrine is dark with weeds

And all the snake-gods in the shrine
Have lichen on their hoods.
O it hurts me she cried,
Wiping a reddened eye
For I love this house, it hurts me much
To watch it die.
When I grow old, I said,
And very very rich
I shall rebuild the fallen walls
And make new this ancient house.
My great-grandmother
Touched my cheeks and smiled.
She was really simple.
Fed on God for years
All her feasts were monotonous
For the only dish was always God
And the rest mere condiments.
She told us how she rode her elephant
When she was ten or eleven
Every Monday without fail
To the Siva shrine
And back to home again
And, told us of the jewel box
And the brocade from the north
And the perfumes and the oils
And the sandal for her breasts
And her marriage to a prince
Who loved her deeply for a lovely short year
And died of fever, in her arms
She told us
That we had the oldest blood
My brother and she and I
The oldest blood in the world
A blood thin and clear and fine
While in the veins of the always poor
And in the veins
Of the new-rich men
Flowed a blood thick as gruel
And muddy as a ditch.

Finally she lay dying
 In her eighty sixth year
 A woman wearied by compromise
 Her legs quilted with arthritis
 And with only a hard cough
 For comfort
 I looked deep into her eyes
 Her poor bleary eyes
 And prayed that she would not grieve
 So much about the house.
 I had learnt by then
 Most lessons of defeat,
 Had found out that to grow rich
 Was a difficult feat.
 The house was crouching
 On its elbows then,
 It looked that night in the pallid moon
 So grotesque and alive.
 When they burnt my great grandmother
 Over logs of the mango tree
 I looked once at the house
 And then again and again
 For I thought I saw the windows close
 Like the closing of the eyes
 I thought I heard the pillars groan
 And the dark rooms heave a sigh.
 I set forth again
 For other towns,
 Left the house with the shrine
 And the sands
 And the flowering shrubs
 And the wide rabid mouth of the Arabian Sea.

* * *

I know the rats are running now
 Across the darkened halls
 They do not fear the dead
 I know the white ants have reached my home
 And have raised on walls

Strange totems of burial.
At night, in stillness,
From every town I live in
I hear the rattle of its death
The noise of rafters creaking
And the windows' whine.
I have let you down
Old house, I seek forgiveness
O mother's mother's mother
I have plucked your soul
Like a pip from a fruit
And have flung it into your pyre
Call me callous
Call me selfish
But do not blame my blood
So thin, so clear, so fine
The oldest blood in the world
That remembers as it flows
All the gems and all the gold
And all the perfumes and the oils
And the stately
Elephant ride...
