

Lesson 8

The Bundle of Sticks

Look at the pictures. They are people who help us in our everyday lives:

I'm a milkman.
I bring milk
for all.

I'm a car mechanic. I repair cars.

I'm a fishmonger.
I sell fishes.

I'm a cloth merchant. I sell clothes.

I'm a lawyer.
I advise people
about law.

I'm a plumber.
I fit and repair
water pipes.

I'm a grocer. I sell food and other things used at home.

I'm a hawker.
I bring newspapers.

Tell your friend which of these people you have seen or met. How do they help you?

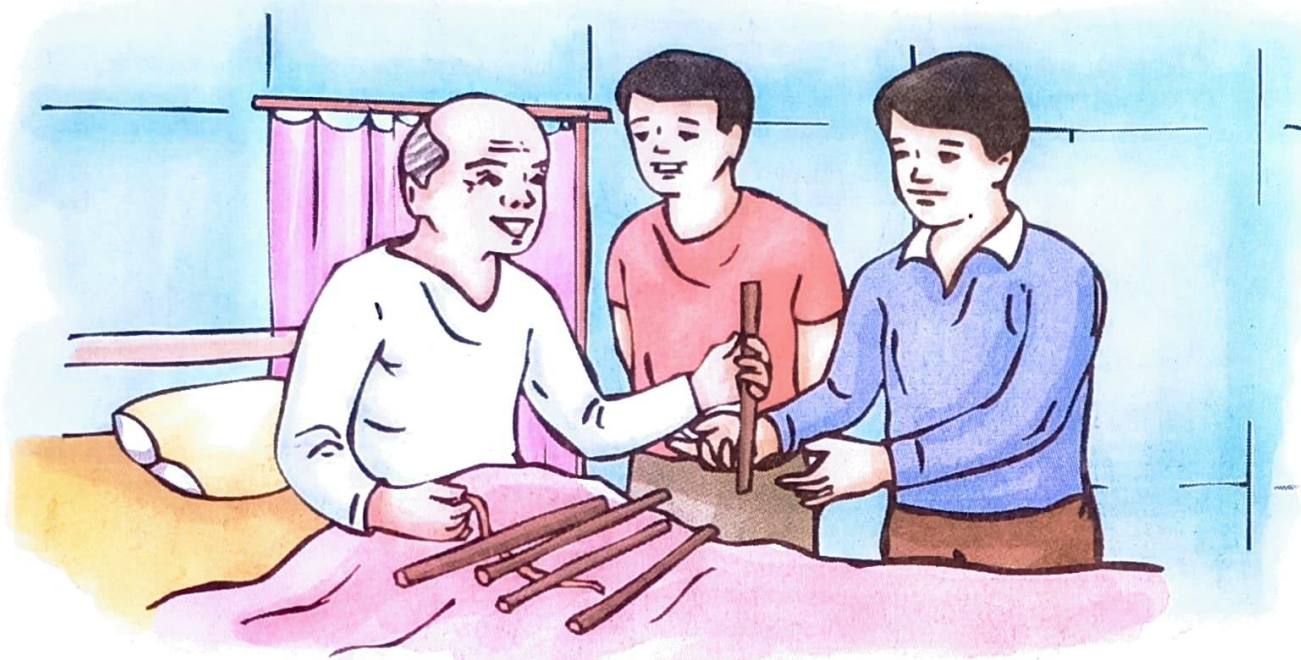

Now, read this story about a farmer and his four sons:

Once upon a time there was an old farmer. He had four clever sons. They had different professions. The eldest son was a doctor, the second son was a lawyer, the third son was a farmer and the youngest son was a cloth merchant. But the sons quarrelled with each other all the time. This made the farmer sad.

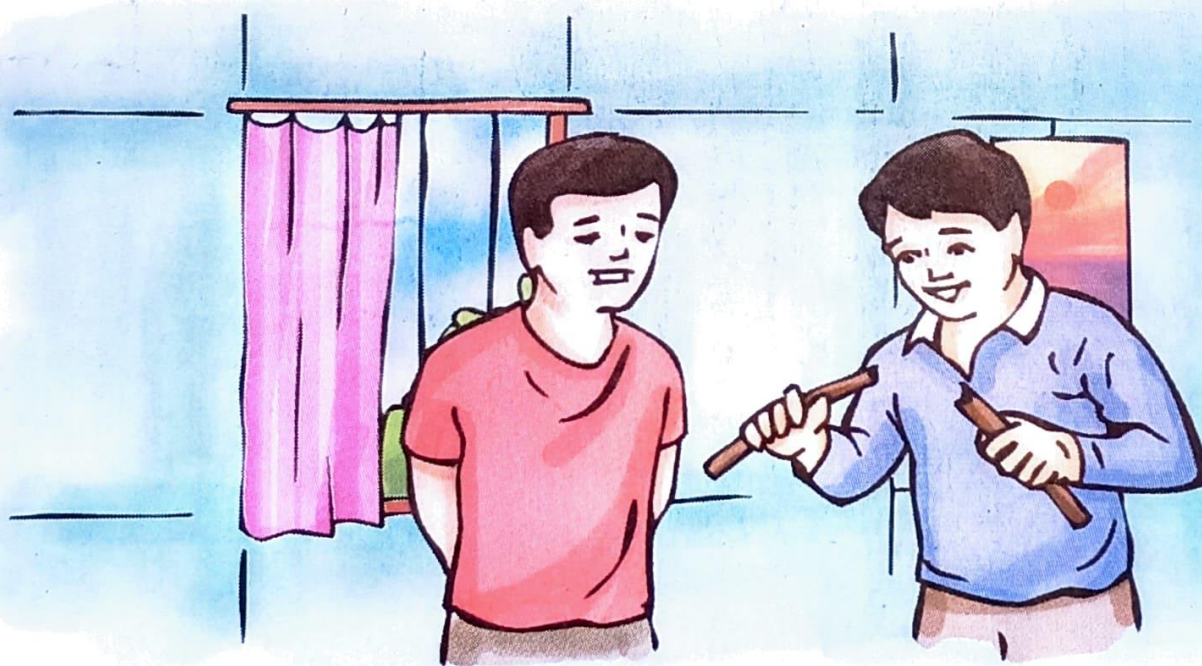

One day the father called the sons. He gave them a bundle of sticks tied with a rope. He asked them to break it.

Each one tried but could not break it. Then the father untied the bundle and gave each one a single stick. He said, "Now break the sticks."

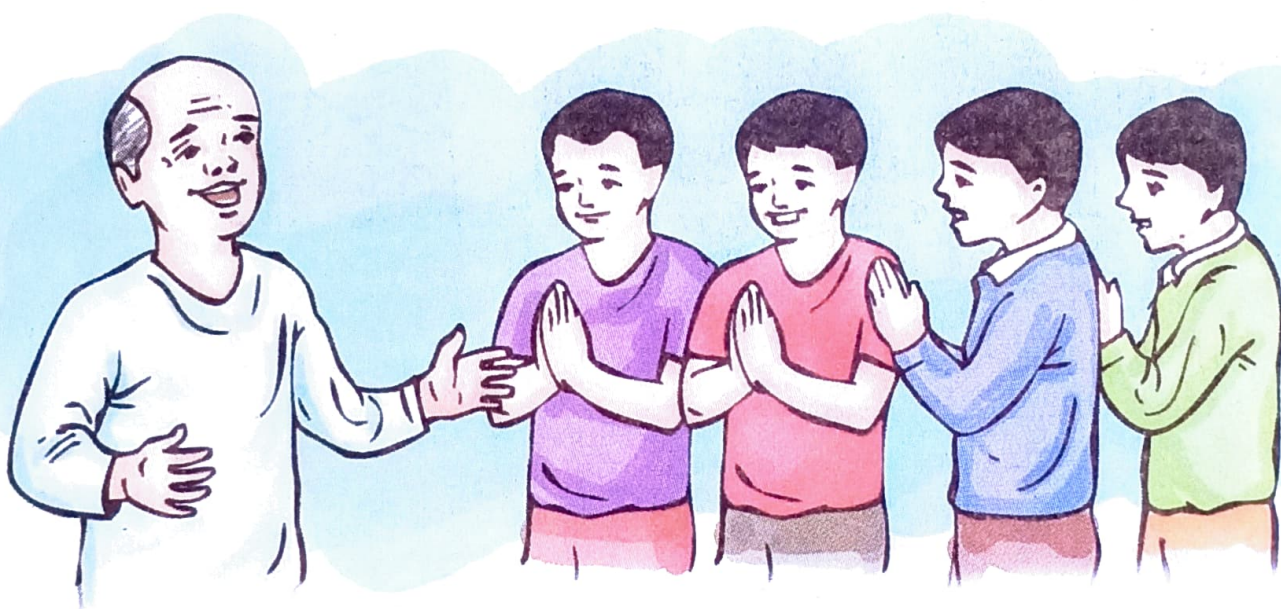

This time the sons easily broke the sticks.

The father said, "When the sticks were tied in a bundle, you could not break them. But when I gave one stick to each of you, you could easily break it. What do you understand from this?"

The eldest son replied, "As long as we are together no one can hurt us. If we quarrel we'll always be unhappy."

The sons promised their father that they would not quarrel anymore. The father was happy.
