The ambition of my life

My ambition in life is to become a doctor. I have taken up science and hygiene as optional subjects. When I joined college, I shall take up a medical group. I shall appear in the P.M.T. examination to qualify for joining a Medical College. After passing the P.M.T., I shall join the medical college to become a doctor.

I do not want to be a clerk. This line does not suit me. This work is tiring. A clerk has to sit and lean on the table from morning till evening. His work is very her. He hardly makes both ends meet.

I do not want to be a teacher. Teachers have not much respect these days. His lot is very hard. He is low paid and overworked. He lives from hand to mouth. It makes this early living he has Torun after tuitions. This is really degrading. The engineering line is certainly good, but I have no liking for mathematics which is an essential subject to be an Engineer.

Law is not a paying profession these days. There is keen competition It is also overcrowded. In every village, Panchayats are elected, and most of the cases are settled there. In the future, lawyers will get a few cases only. So there is no use to pass the law.

I would like to be a doctor. My country has become free, the Government has decided to uproot the diseases from the country and improve the health of the people. Hospitals are being opened for this purpose. There is a great demand for doctors. Taking all these things into consideration. I have made up my mind to become a doctor.

My Ambition in Life

Everybody has an ambition in his life. Life without ambition does not lead anywhere. You do not know where to go and what to do. A person with a set of ambitions sets his goals will in advance. He does not lead astray. His eyes are always on his ultimate goal. He cannot be misled by other temptations. He is the master of his luck. He does not believe in destiny. He works very hard. His energy does not go waste. He goes on and on forcefully. His health does not fail him. Failures do not change his mood to change his track.

Ambition is a great incentive to work. If you have an ambition, you can pursue it all your life and never feel tired. It drives you on and on quite tirelessly. You must decide early in life whether you want to become an engineer, a doctor, a lawyer, a teacher, banker, join Indian Administrative Service, or Indian Foreign Service, join Army, Air Force or Navy or become a commercial pilot, or a scientist, philosopher, writer or a poet, a musician or an artist. The whole world is open before a young man and he should make up his mind about his career as early as possible.

Ambition

Every person should set ambition because without ambition life would be meaningless. It would be just passing of time. Ambition makes life challenging and challenges make life interesting. Ambition has been the backbone of every army! Through those great ancient Egyptian wars, through Persia, through Hastings, through Waterloo, through the native American, greedy colonist battles, through the world-wars, through the Balkans, and through every other great conflict that has ever existed each party was blessed by pure and passionate ambition...ambition to win at whatever cost necessary. Surely only the collective force of ambition found in a battle is liable to cause as much suffering and damage as has been caused by all battles that have ever been lost or won? Even the weakest, most injured warrior who persevered has been touched not by insanity, but by raw ambition, and even the most perturbed and exasperated warlord is supported not by his schemes, but by the ambition to realize them. Ambition is the source of all that is good and all that is evil! It makes the wonders and it makes the wars. Ambition is the winner and loser of every game! Every footballer, every chess player, every marathon runner, every duck-legged Olympic walker smells of fervor, which seeps from the pores of their ambition. When years of dedication pass the baton to ambition, there is a sage to be reckoned with. One only wonders why in spite of the eternal paradoxical query, "What would happen if an irresistible force met with an irresistible force?" Does someone always have to lose? Ambition makes you healthy, wealthy, and wise! Doesn't it? Observe this immortal quotation of Henry Ford: "Whether you think you can or you think you cannot, you are right" The truth he successfully conveys is that we are the scribes of our own destiny. It is an ambition that makes us think we can be successful, and lack of ambition that makes us think we cannot. Ambition and luck are both arch-enemies and best of friends. Ambition is a pain in the neck! It is the finger that sets the alarm for 6 am, the fingers that turn the cold key of the cold car on a cold morning. It compels us to do what we'd really rather put off until tomorrow, it slaps the wrist of apathy. Ambition is the sole witness at the sepulcher of the "unsuccessful at everything". You see, ambitious tears only fall from a fountain of youth—so they'll kiss the piled soil, make it wet, and whisper with complacency, "I made you successful at being unsuccessful". Because ambition never likes to give in.

Ambition

Ambition seems to be an emotion unique to humankind. It is a more advanced form of desire or passion commonly seen in most animals. But unlike other emotions, like love and sorrow, or feelings like hunger and thirst, which create a similar impact on everyone, ambition varies from person to person. Therefore, while food can satisfy everyone's hunger, and companionship, the need for love, no common formula, by which the ambitions of all may be fulfilled alike, is possible.

Ambition is closely related to the lifestyles and priorities of each period. If the common ambition in the past was to become a teacher or a lawyer, it is now an engineer, a medical doctor, software professional, or a stockbroker that most people wish to be. But even though there is much variety in ambitions, all of them are fueled by a common desire for a respectable and privileged social status, as well as for security and stability in life.

The nature of ambitions changes not only from person to person but from time to time, in the same person. If as a child, our wish was to become a teacher or a pilot, in later life it may be to become a doctor or an actor. In childhood, since our minds and thoughts are immature, they are unable to help us decide about our future properly.

Nevertheless, we should start preparations to realize our ambitions as early in life as possible. In adolescence, we would have come to know of our abilities and drawbacks well enough to start planning our future. Our attitudes and attributes during that period can indicate with fair accuracy what we shall be in the future. While an aptitude in mathematics and science, and a talent to make simple mechanical devices, may indicate a career in engineering, an interest in living things and the curiosity to know about their constitution may point to the medical profession. Likewise, interest in the fine arts or performing arts may suggest a career in painting or acting, as will a talent for composing poems or story-telling, promise poets and novelists of the future. However, not always will early talent blossom satisfactorily though to sustain itself in the future. Quite often, early promise fizzles out, thereby making an absolute mockery of the ambition based on it. It is, therefore, important to understand, that having ambitions, and realizing them, are entirely different propositions. Talent and ability, by themselves, cannot ensure success. They can lead to success only if they are supported by hard work and optimism.

The key to nurturing talent, and thereby to realizing ambitions, is hard work. Every opportunity that helps develop our potential should be made use of, as should those that will enable us to test our attributes. Realizing ambitions should be a continuing process, which must boldly counter the challenges it may face from time to time. We must be prepared to refine and reform our plans to suit the situations that we face, as we move ahead with time.

Working hard on ambitions should not, however, put us under undue pressure, owing to which we might focus too much on the future, to the disadvantage of the present. We should have a balanced view of the future, to avoid disappointments that may be caused by adverse situations. The future, as such, is unpredictable; and as with many other things in life, our hopes about it may be frustrated. But if we have a suitably flexible and versatile mentality, we can modify our ambitions, should such a need arise.

As ambitions help us acquaint ourselves with our abilities, they add to our personality development. They will fine-tune our talents and make them productive. However, ambitions should be within bounds. They should be reasonable and realistic. There is no point in a blind man's aspiration to become a pilot. An undesirable aspect of over-ambition is the dependence on improprieties and malpractice. If we are in any way ineligible to pursue our ambition, it is better that we abandon it or choose another that may be suitable, rather than compensate for our ineligibility with malpractice.

Ambitions should always be individually inspired. They should not be influenced by the opinion or compulsion of others. Pressure from others is an important reason for the failure of most ambitions.

Ambition is good or bad according to the way in which it affects others. Our ambitions, while fulfilling our desires, should not act against the interests of society. They should complement the aspirations of society, in a manner that will fetch appreciation and acclaim.

My Ambition in Life

Aim gives purpose and direction to life. Without aim, life is like a boat without an oar. Nothing good and great can be achieved without aim. A man without aim becomes a creature of circumstances. He goes astray in life. His life ends in a fiasco. Therefore a man must have some definite goal in life.

If it is essential to have an aim in life. It is equally essential that the aim should be the right one. A wrong aim ruins a man. All his efforts go waste. His time and energy prove fruitless. A man must set an aim before him right in his early life. The choice of an aim depends on the taste and inclination of a person. However one can seek the advice of wise persons in this matter.

Different people have different aims. Some want to become businessmen. They believe that businessmen have plenty of everything. Their life is one of ease and pleasure. Others want to be doctors or engineers. Such people think that by becoming a doctor or an engineer, they can win name and fame in society. Still, others aspire to become L.A.S. or P.C.S. officers. They want to enjoy power and authority. But I don't wish to become any of them.

I have decided to become a teacher. A teacher is a nation-builder His job is a missionary job. My aim shall not be to make money. I shall give free coaching to poor students. I shall infuse the spirit of duty and discipline in them. I shall act as their guide, friend, and guardian. I shall set before them high ideals for their guidance. I pray to God to help me to achieve my goal.

My Ambition in Life

Ambition always gives life meaning. I do not want to nurture any ambition for personal benefit. I am a part of the huge and diversified society in which many people are poverty-stricken, exploited, and miserable. I want to be committed to them. Hence I aim at becoming a social worker. As a social worker, I will work in distant and remote villages of India where people are illiterate and trapped in religious superstitions. I shall try to present their case to the government. To fight for the cause of the destitute and downtrodden has been my long-cherished dream. I shall make every effort to make them realize that it's they who create history and not the chosen few or any socio-political power. Besides, I shall inspire my compatriots to join hands with me. I have a strong belief that one day all human beings together can make this world a better place to live in. And it's always good, to begin with, one's motherland. I think that only sincerity, determination, and commitment can elevate the present day world to the heights 'where the mind is without fear and the head held high'.
