The baby cooking pot.

One day Nasaruddin called on a friend and said to him. “May I borrow your cooking-pot ?”

“Yes, Nasaruddin, I will gladly lend you it to you for a short while” replied his friend.

After a few days Nasaruddin returned the cooking-pot with another small pot inside it.

“What is that inside my cooking-pot ?” asked his friend.

“Well, while your cooking-pot was with me it had a baby. I have brought both the mother and the baby back, so that the mother can look after the baby.”

The friend thought that this was strange, but said nothing. He took both the pots from Nasaruddin. After some time Nasaruddin again wanted to borrow the cooking-pot. This time the friend gladly gave it to him, thinking he would get another pot with it.

Some time later, the friend went to Nasaruddin and asked him, “Please let me have my cooking-pot, back. You have kept it for a long time and I can’t cook my meal in the other pots.”

Nasaruddin looking sad and tearful. He said, “I am sorry that I have not returned your cooking-pot, but the cooking-pot fell ill and died.”

“Fell ill ? Died ? shouted the friend. “How can a cooking-pot fall ill or die ? I can’t believe it. You are a liar and a cheater.”

“Why can’t you believe it ? said Nasaruddin. “If a cooking-pot can have a baby, why can’t it die ?” The friend realized his mistake and was ashamed of himself.
